According to the Bureau of Labor Statics, employment for those who majored in psychology is projected to grow 14 percent from 2016 to 2026, faster than the average for all occupations. Employment growth will vary by occupation. For example, employment of clinical, counseling, and the overall understanding of human nature, is projected to grow 14 percent from 2016 to 2026, faster than the average for all occupations. Greater demand for psychological services in schools, hospitals, mental health centers, social service agencies, along with retailers, human resources, pharmaceutical companies, and corporations should drive employment growth.

Essentially, the demand for psychology majors will increase as people will be needed to provide services to an aging population, helping people deal with the mental, physical and physiological changes that happen. Also, employment of industrial–organizational psychologists is projected to grow 8 percent from 2016 to 2026, about as fast as the average for all occupations. Organizations will continue to use industrial–organizational psychologists to help select and retain employees, increase organizational productivity and efficiency, and improve office morale.

Professional associations are a great way for college students, recent graduates, and career changers to enhance personal and professional development while being provided endless networking opportunities. Being a member of an association also offers chances to attend conferences, learn about latest industry trends, scholarships, internship opportunities, along with attitudes and competencies expected in the industries of interest. Many associations encourage students to participate and even offer drastically reduced membership rates. Being a member of an association could be the best thing you do for your career.
