

SECONDARY EDUCATION

According to the Bureau of Labor and the Occupational Outlook Handbook, employment of high school teachers is projected to grow 8 percent from 2016 to 2026, about as fast as average for all occupations. Rising student enrollment should increase demand for high school teachers, but employment growth will vary by region. Employment growth for public high school teachers may depend on state and local government budgets. Many schools report that they have difficulty filling teaching positions for certain subjects, including math, science, English as a second language, and special education. As a result, teachers with education in those subjects or certifications to teach those specialties should have better job prospects.
